

Can you imagine a more irritating situation, sitting in a crowded cabin with minimal "personal space" having multiple phone conversations going on around you, each speaking louder than the next in order to be heard? There is enough tension associated with air travel both as a passenger and as provider without adding cell phones to the mix.